UPDATE ON OBTAINING HANDGUN CARRY PERMIT

In Wednesday's Morning Fax, we outlined the steps in obtaining the new Tennessee Concealed Handgun Carry permit. There are a couple of things you need to be aware of when you take your drivers license and birth certificate to the Tennessee Drivers License Center. The names on the drivers license and birth certificate must match. In the case of a married woman, the names do not match. In that event, you need to take a valid passport or your official marriage certificate with you. Just make sure the name matches the name on your driver's license. For more information about applying for the new Concealed Handgun Carry permit, go to this website: <https://www.tn.gov/safety/tnhp/handgun/handgunonline.html> You'll find information there about how to apply for the permit, a list of the vendors (now 14) who offer the online video course and exam, and links to their websites, eligibility requirements, fees, and more.

♦ COMMUNITY NEWS YOU CAN USE:

✓ Women at the Well is in need of about 30 "Experiencing God" workbooks for their students. If you would be willing to donate or help purchase the books, please call 745-0010.

✓ Lara Crockett, director of the Etowah Carnegie Library, recently graduated from the Tennessee Public Library Management Program and received her Public Library Management Certification. To earn certification, librarians must complete three years of course work, 90 hours of continuing education, and complete a final project.

Tennessee House and Senate leaders have introduced a resolution that would add Tennessee's Right to Work law to the state constitution. The measure is sponsored by several committee leaders, including Sen. Mike Bell of Riceville, chairman of the Senate Judiciary Committee.

Tennessee's Right to Work statute has been state law since 1947. It provides that workers cannot be hired or fired based on their membership in, affiliation with, resignation from, or refusal to join or affiliate with any labor union or employee organizations. When introduced in 1947, supporters of the bill argued that it would "be of great advantage to the average member of organized labor." It also protects the rights of those who choose not to join a union.

Senator Bell says, "There is no better place than our State Constitution to ensure that Tennessee remains a right to work state." The resolution is supported by the Tennessee Chamber of Commerce which says "Embedding Right to Work permanently in our constitution sends a strong message that Tennessee is and always will be ready for business". If passed by the General Assembly in 2020, the resolution would need to pass by a two-thirds majority in the 2021 or 2022 legislative session in order to appear on the ballot for a statewide referendum in November 2022.

The amendment would become part of the state constitution if adopted by a majority vote in the governor's election.
